

SO you passed the first test and you're feeling pretty proud of yourself. Possibly, you forgot that David Soul - famous from TV's Starsky and Hutch - sang "Don't Give Up on Us." And very likely, no one ever brought it to your attention that the song writing team of Murray & Callander who gave us "Billy, Don't Be a Hero" also penned "The Night Chicago Died." (Wow, lightning really does strike twice!) But you knew what you needed to know to get through the quiz. And now, thanks to us, you can't get those ghastly tuned out of your head.

Well, get ready to displace those sticky sweet melodies with new ones. Shenbop's second 1970's Pop Music Quiz subscribes to the same rules as the first: match the song title with the lyrics that immediately follow it. This time, however, we've increased the difficulty level. We've met only a few lost souls who can hum the tune to Maureen McGovern's earnest "The Morning After." And despite the fact that "Disco Duck" outsold every other single in 1976, its disturbing chorus seems to have vanished from our minds. God can be kind.

Match seven of the tunes and Shenbop won't have to scowl at you. (Being dead, that's about the only scornful expression he can muster.) Get all ten correct and you're seriously demented. We still love you and everything, but you need help.
